In September 1996 we reported on the ILM or Integrated Livestock Management program at CSU. The purpose of the ILM is to focus the research, outreach efforts and teaching activities of multiple departments within the University on issues important to Colorado animal agriculture. The bimonthly publication of The Colorado Dairy News, the coliform mastitis research effort reported in this issue, both the Johne's Disease educational initiative and the volunteer Johne's Disease testing program, and the Bulk Tank Culture Testing program, described in the September 1998 issue, are part of the ILM Dairy program.

We are proud to offer the ILM website (www.cvmbs.colostate.edu/ilm) and wish to thank Rick Anderson of Fort Collins for his hard work developing the site. You will find a complete description of the mission, organization, research and outreach activities, and participants of the ILM. The Colorado Dairy News is archived and descriptions of and results from our research projects are summarized. Please visit the site and email us with your impressions. We welcome your suggestions.
